National Book Foundation Biology -. A. Dietary factors and fatty acid intake and breast cancer prognosis and death. This research explored the associations between breast cancer risk and dietary fat intake, measured at interview, and between dietary fat intake and breast cancer-specific survival. We conducted a population-based case-control study in Toronto, Ontario, between 1991 and 1997, with a median follow-up of 10.1 years. Eligible cases included women diagnosed with incident, histologically confirmed invasive breast cancer during the study period, and eligible controls were women with negative self-reported breast cancer history who reported no physician-diagnosed breast cancer in the previous five years and were frequency-matched to the cases on age, ethnicity, and physician-diagnosed breast cancer. Interviews were conducted to measure usual dietary fat intake. Data on potential confounders were collected through in-person interviews and from medical records. Adjusted odds ratios were derived from conditional logistic regression. Survival analyses used Cox proportional hazards models. Among cases diagnosed at age 50. There were insufficient dietary fat measures to assess change in this study. Breast cancer-specific survival was decreased among women with high saturated fat intake, although the confidence interval crossed 1.0. A decline in the risk of breast cancer in this cohort in recent years cannot be discounted as a potential explanation for these observations.Q: Rendering the first few images of a slider using template based approach I am using a template-based approach for the first time.
