Bromelain is known to have potential benefits in treating neurological and psychiatric disorders, but the mechanism has not been investigated. Here we examined the effect of bromelain on memory and anxiety in a mild cognitive impairment (MCI) mouse model. We used a Y-maze assay to determine whether bromelain could improve memory in a mouse model of MCI induced by A β 1-42. We also evaluated the activity of the aorta ex vivo in mice that were given bromelain and controls using a tension testing apparatus. For the in vivo experiments, control and MCI mice were administered bromelain 1 h before training in the Y-maze, and the average time of crossing three arms of the Y-maze was recorded, 1 h after training. A two-way repeated-measures analysis of variance showed that the control mice spent significantly more time in the target arm in comparison to the MCI-induced mice. As a result of bromelain treatment, the mice in the MCI + bromelain group spent significantly more time in the target arm than the MCI + vehicle group did. In the ex vivo experiments, the tension of the aorta from control mice was significantly lower than that of the aorta from bromelain-treated mice. These results suggest that bromelain promotes the improvement of memory in a mouse model of MCI. Although the mechanism underlying bromelain's improvement of cognitive function remains unknown, it is likely that the improvement is related to its vasodilating effect on the aorta.Q: Django: Unresolved template variable I'm currently writing a Django project but I can't get one thing to work. The main features of the proposed operating room are: a) A self-contained life-support system; b) The opportunity to use a surgical microscope and fiberoptic endoscopes; c) Patient monitoring through blood pressure and oxygen analysis; d) The capacity to introduce and maintain topical and local anaesthesia, with an infusion pump; e) Spontaneous breathing during surgery; f) A haemorrhage control system. When used for microsurgery, the surgical equipment would be connected to a miniaturized life-support system housed in a special chamber. The patient would be attached to this chamber, with an artificial airway and mechanical ventilation. The surgical room,
