I have the collection name and the username, but I don't know if there is any way to find out which documents belong to which user. A: The only way to do this would be to connect to the system and directly query MongoDB for any number of documents that are not owned by your user in the database. For example, if you have the users collection with users documents (username, roles, etc.) and you have the collection test with documents owned by user1, I guess there's no way to query for all documents that are owned by another user. If you could, you'd be able to trivially access any document on a server that you owned, even though users are not stored in MongoDB. Q: Load a RasterLayer
