• 'Sky City Rebirth' is new revolutionary 3D offline shooter with virtual reality technology. • Game story is made in the conjunction of modern science and fiction. • There is no collision between the objects in your hands when we use the wireless controller. • In this game, you can customize any weapon you want on your own with no limits. • You can get any level of modules and weapons in this game. Q: using pure JS to re-encode this array of objects, keeping the keys I have an array of objects in an array. I'd like to write a pure JS function that: Re-encodes each element as a new string Keeps the keys, but not the values (see below) Returns the new array as a string Below is a simple example of my array and a function that gets me part way there: `const arr = [{ name: "Jim", key: "J" }, { name: "Bob", key: "B" }, { name: "Joe", key: "J" }]; const func = (arr) => { return arr .map(({ name }) => `${name}-${name.toUpperCase()}`) .join(" "); }; console.log(func(arr)); // Result: // "Jjim-Jjjob-Jjoe " If I change the arrow function to: const func = (arr) => { const newArr = arr.map((v, k) => `${k}-${v.toUpperCase()}`); return newArr.join(" "); }; // Result: // "JBjjjjjjjjj=B " It still duplicates the names instead of returning them as separate strings. How do I write this function to get the result as desired? A: You could take the keys as the basis for the mapping result. const getMapResult = (arr, mapFn) => arr.map(({ key }) => mapFn(key)); console.log(getMapResult([{ name: "Jim", key: "J" }, { name: "c9d1549cdd`

THE STORY So I'm on the way back from work and it's raining and I pull over and read this thing in a magazine and it says you can make this terrible remix of a 10-year-old game called Nidhogg and call it Nidhogg 2. And at first I thought, 10 years ago? So I looked it up online and it's actually a sequel to a 2002 game called Nidhogg. I'm like, "Okay, that's pretty cool," so I play Nidhogg 2 and the first thing I notice is that this game is so unbelievably gorgeous that I almost can't handle it. That's what is so cool about this game is the art, and it really looks like something that could have been made only in the last 10 years. This game looks like a JRPG or a video game from the NES era, but really it's from 10 years ago. There's no noticeable age or lag in the game because it's made with technology that existed at the time the game was made. I feel like I'm actually playing it on that time line. When I first played it I played the arcade version of the first game and Nidhogg 2 just feels so much more polished and prettier and plays so much better than the first game. It's kind of a mixed bag. There's something to be said for both and I really like the sequel but the sequel doesn't really feel like a sequel so much as a rip-off of the first game. I'm sure there's a reason for this that I'm just not seeing. I really can't put my finger on it. I think maybe the first game is more original and they made this game because they want to make a commercial game that's a rip-off of the first game. But the way they go about that really kind of pisses me off because there are so many things in the first game that they didn't get the chance to rip-off in the sequel. For example, Nidhogg had a level where a bunch of goblins would come out of a gate in a row and wave their arms around and they were kind of like normal enemies. And they were all like one color and had big eyes and arms and legs and stuff. This sequel has a level where there's a bunch of goblins in a row who have small arms, a head, and no eyes, and they're all the same color. Nidhogg has this really awesome obstacle course level where you're fighting a band of goblins and
