12:11:35 AM PDT Updated: 08/30/2014 12:11:37 AM PDT BERLIN -- A man who was the first person to break a world record in a winter sport, luge, has died of a heart attack during a training session at the European championships, officials said Monday. The luge world record was set on Feb. 8 in Altenberg, Germany, in what the International Luge Federation described as one of the "greatest speed increases in history." Russian Alexander Kasjanov, 42, of Novosibirsk, Russia, was driving at the time of his death. The European luge federation said at a news conference in Berlin that Kasjanov died during training for the European luge championships, which begin on Wednesday in Gelsenkirchen, Germany. The federation says Kasjanov didn't have proper medical supervision and that according to the incident report, his breathing was inadequate. The federation says Kasjanov had a heart transplant about two years ago and did not have a known history of heart problems. It says he was resting in a room near the track and was monitored on a cardiac monitor when his heart stopped and didn't start again. Kasjanov's next of kin were told but declined to comment.
