ChemOffice ChemOffice ChemOffice is a spreadsheet application for chemistry oriented researchers, chemists, and other scientific and engineering professionals. It is specifically designed for scientists and chemical engineers working on the day-to-day issues of chemical and biological research, including calculations. ChemOffice is a scientific spreadsheet with formulas and functions and supports advanced cell formats including stacked and grouped column, conditional formats, array formulas, arrayed functions and a built in calculus engine for complex iterative functions. The ChemOffice user interface is designed for easy navigation and a clean and intuitive appearance. Functionalities are usually situated in the upper right side of the main screen. The application is highly customizable and has several standard toolbars (w/o native Excel/OpenOffice and the special tabs for the various types of reports), the option to create own toolbars and tool windows from scratch. Tool windows can also be dismissed and re-opened via the "Dismissable Controls" in the user interface. It contains a graphical calculation engine with the following calculation types: Math, Logical, Arithmetic, Scientific, and Calculus. The engine supports built-in functions as well as the ability to add custom functions written in VBScript, Excel Macro and VBA. Aussie supercar maker decided to run through the family home, and were a bit stuck up the sides of it! How do you pull the car back down? More funnier vid... :D not_too_evil is the door pin would fit into the holes? i mean, does the pin compress the hole size to allow easier insertion, or does it just protrude the hole like a ring or just a stud? Cobra_Jack To this day I still dont get why every picture in that video has the car stuck on the side of the house insynhythm man I really love this vid. The best is when his mom walks out onto the porch with the hammer and the car after all the wrecking she says " Hmmmm I feel something scratchy under here" and she grabs her ass and the car falls off. Great! did you hear the part when he puts the car in drive and drives it back down to the porch? i
